Paideia was founded by a group of families in Turin wanting to help disadvantaged children in the areas of social welfare and health care. The Paideia team works in two main ways directed at disadvantaged children and their families: direct services and awarding of grants. These areas are divided into support and promotion and development.

Support Area

Support can include financial assistance, counselling, socialisation activities and recreational outlets. Paideia's direct services are aimed at children with disabilities and chronic illnesses and take into account the overall needs of them and their families.

Promotion and Development Area

Paideia awards grants to various groups ranging from non-profits to government agencies. It creates new programmes and looks to improve upon existing ones in the area of child welfare. From a strategic standpoint, Paideia provides assistance for successful organisational development, fundraising, programme evaluation and assessment, communication and identification of performance measures.

An integral part of Paideia's work is conducting research in the area of child development. With research on critical areas that affect the lives of children, the foundation can develop effective community programmes based on the results.
